Husband No. 1 Still Lives.

A strange story came to light a day or two ago. Near the end of the late civil war a well to do young lady and gentleman were married in one of the New England States under the happiest prospects for the future. They began housekeeping in the outskirts of a thrifty village and in a few years became prosperous. Three children came to bless the union and the domestic happiness of the pair was complete. During the centennial year the husband caught the gold fever, and bidding his wife and babies goodbye he departed for the Pacific slope full of visions in which a colossal fortune easily earned was the central figure. During the first year of the husband's absence he wrote frequently, and his letters were full of bright anticipations. The second year he wrote less frequently, and as time wore on his letters came at long intervals until about 1881, when they ceased altogether, the last one coming from a mining camp in New Mexico. In the meantime the wife removed to Cleveland, where she established herself in a cosy home. Not long after the arrival of the last letter the wife learned on what she deemed reliable authority that her husband was dead, and as no more letters came from him, she became convinced of the truth of the statement that her husband had died as stated. Nearly six years passed away, and the widow was wooed and won by a Cleveland gentleman of means. They were married and have lived in this city since. Not a doubt existed in the minds of either husband or wife that the remains of husband No. 1 were quietly resting in a far away grave until about ten days ago, when a letter was received from him. He had gone up into California and fortune had at last smiled upon him. The wife was thunderstruck, and she at once applied to an attorney for advice. Under his instruction she immediately left husband No. 2 and went to live with relatives in the city until she could secure a legal separation in the courts from him. The attorney referred to has prepared a divorce petition which will be filed immediately. The names of the persons interested are not published for obvious reasons. It is not known at this time whether husband No. 1 will return to claim his wife or not.—Cleveland Leader.

THE MAIDEN AND THE VIPER.

In the family of a settler, who resides some half a league from Parametta, Australia, was an invalid daughter of an extremely nervous temperament. She was sleeping one summer afternoon in a hammock swung between two supporting standards in the shade of the piazza, when she was suddenly awakened by feeling something cold and moist clinging about her throat. She put her hand to the spot and clasped the body of a snake just back of the head, and with a horrified cry, wrenched with all her strength to pull it away. This was the first instinctive action of the moment, but so great was her terror that she speedily lost all consciousness of her position. Her hand, however, still grasped the snake where she had first seized upon it and with such a convulsive force that the creature was rendered powerless. The cry of the terrified girl brought the father from within the house, who instantly came to her relief; but in the fit which her fright had induced, her hand slowly contracted about the creature's throat with a force which she could not possibly have exerted when awake, and, before her fingers were unclashed by the aid of a bit of hammock cord, the reptile was completely strangled. Fortunately the creature had not bitten the girl before she seized it, and after that it was unable to do so. It is said to have been four feet long and of a poisonous nature.
